

THALER & GERTLER, LLP

Attorneys at Law

900 Merchants Concourse, Suite 414
Westbury, New York 11590

(516) 228-3553
Fax (516) 228-3396

Andrew M. Thaler
Richard G. Gertler

Michael A. Farina
John J. Hanley

OF COUNSEL:
Stanley Thaler

April 18, 2005

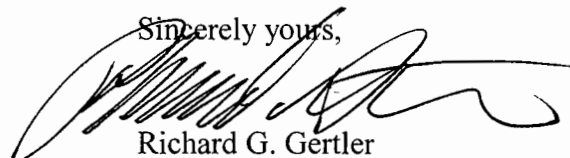

To Whom It May Concern:

I met Dr. Dan Schaefer a little over a year ago at a lecture he had given. Although I was somewhat skeptical, I had a burning curiosity to learn more about his techniques for enhancing athletic and business performance. I had been playing golf for several years and, despite numerous lessons and countless hours of practice, I could not seem to improve my game. My handicap at the time was a 19. During any particular round of golf, I could hit three (3) or four (4) sensational shots, with the balance of the shots being either average or terribly poor. I knew that these "good shots" were somewhere inside of me and I knew that I could be a better player if I could only figure out how to bring these shots to the surface more often.

I worked with Dr. Schaefer on about a hand full of occasions to learn several techniques for relaxation and concentration. Utilizing mind game drills, I was able to visualize what I was doing correctly on the golf course and rehearse my good shots in my mind without a club in my hand. Within a few weeks, good shots began to appear more often and more frequently in each round. My scores began dropping from the mid-90's to the mid to lower 80's. Within just a few months, my handicap went from a 19 to a 12. Whenever I would have a bad shot, I felt confident that I had the mental strength to re-focus and get my composure back so that my next shot would be great. At one point during the mid-Summer, my playing buddies were giving me any putt within 20 feet of the cup because I was consistently draining every putt within that distance. I can honestly say that when I play a round of golf today, it is an extremely enjoyable and relaxing experience as compared to frustrating experiences I have encountered in the past. There is nothing better than taking money from the "A" players who cannot believe the change in my game. I also use these same techniques for business situations and for improving my legal skills.

I highly recommend and endorse Dr. Schaefer's mind game techniques for enhancing athletic and business performance.

Sincerely yours,

Richard G. Gertler